A Good Man Gone Home.

Rev. Mortimer Blake, D. D., pastor of the Winslow Congregational church, died this morning, in his 72nd year, of erysipelas. Dr. Blake was born in Pittston, Maine, June 10th, 1813, and was the son of Ira Blake, a native of Wrentham, and a descendant of John Blake of Sandwich. At the age of four years he moved with his parents to Franklin. Early in life he developed a strong passion for books, and every library within his reach was eagerly searched for that which would improve his mind and add to his store of knowledge. At the age of ten he came across a Latin grammar, and, without the aid of a teacher, began at once its study, and so earnest was he in everything which pertained to a gain of book learning, that his grandfather Blake, in order to help him all that was possible, offered to pay the minister if he would hear Mortimer recite. Accordingly Rev. Mr. Smalley took him in hand and long before any thought of college had ever entered his mind he had fully mastered Virgil and Cicero and was all ready to start upon Greek. When he was fifteen years old, a German Jew named Seixas visited Wrentham, to form a class among the ministers of that region, for the study of Hebrew, and young Blake was invited to join the class. Although he consented it was not without fear and trembling among so many who were more thoroughly learned than he was but by his perseverance and studious habits he progressed very rapidly. Not long after this an academy was opened at Medway village, to which he was sent and fitted for college and in 1831 he entered Amherst College, whence he graduated in 1835. In the winter of 1834 he became a decidedly Christian man, and in his college course were developed those rare qualities of heart and mind which have done so much for his ministry and church. At the close of his college course he opened a school in Franklin, having taught with success during his senior year at Hopkins academy, Hadley, and in the course of three years nearly a thousand scholars came under his instructions, many of whom have achieved success in the pulpit and at the bar. During that time he was pursuing his theological studies with Rev. Mr. Smalley, and in April, 1838, he was approbated to preach by the Mendon Association. In the same year (1838) he received and accepted an urgent invitation from the trustees of the Hopkins academy, to take charge of their institution, where he staid one year, beginning to feel that his place was in the ministry. His first pastorate was at Mansfield, where he was ordained December 4, 1839, over a young and struggling church, where for sixteen years he labored faithfully for its advancement and not without success. When in December 4, 1855, he was installed as pastor over the Winslow church in this city, no pastor ever parted from warmer friends than he did with his Mansfield parishioners.

During all the long and unbroken ministry over the Winslow church, not only has this church felt the benefit of such a protracted pastorate but the churches throughout the city have felt the subtle influence of such a rare scholar. Not only in the pulpit was his influence felt, but at church conferences, Sunday school conventions, ministerial associations, and at public gatherings of every name his wise counsels were heeded with that attention and respect which few are capable of inspiring. He was ever a sympathizing, helpful friend especially to the young, who were trying to improve their opportunities and gain indispensable knowledge, and few men of this day command more universal respect and admiration for their many fine qualities, for their almost womanly tenderness and thoughtfulness, than did the Rev. Mortimer Blake.

He was a member of the Agassiz Club of this city, president of the Wheaton Female Seminary and was for many years one of the executive committee of the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society and of the Congregational Board of Publication, and one of the managers and secretary of the Congregational Publishing Society. In 1868 he received the degree of D. D. from his alma mater.

Deceased was not only a ripe scholar, a deep thinker but also an author of considerable note, his "Gethsemane and Cavalry," 16 mo., 1884, having passed through several editions and was widely quoted; in 1853 he wrote a 12-mo "Centennial History of the Mendon Association;" in 1878 an 8 vo. "History of the town of Franklin," besides furnishing leading articles for various magazines and publishing many sermons. He was a zealous and accurate historian, and was for many years a valued member of the New England Historical and Genealogical Society, and one of the vice presidents of the Old Colony Historical Society. He married in 1837 Miss Harriet L. Daniels of Franklin, who survives him as do also four children—two daughters and two sons.
